EXHIBITOR GUIDELINES

The 2017 AAFP Family Medicine Global Health Workshop is projected to attract more than 350 health care professionals who are keenly interested in improving health care in undeveloped regions and underserved communities throughout the world. Attendees will include practicing family physicians, family medicine department chairs and faculty, family medicine residents, residency program faculty, medical students, health care professionals from other medical specialties, and allied health professionals. Exhibitors will have concentrated exposure to individuals who have a profound interest in all aspects of global health. The focus of the exhibit area will be displays that highlight the following:

- Global health volunteering opportunities (e.g., from nongovernmental organizations [NGOs], nonprofit organizations, and medical schools)
- International health experiences and opportunities (e.g., offered by residency programs)
- International educational resources
- Biomedical literature (e.g., from medical schools, residency programs, and publishers of biomedical science books and journals)

An exhibitor list that includes contact information will be provided on the mobile app and in each attendee's registration packet. During the workshop, every general session in the morning and afternoon will be preceded by a PowerPoint presentation that includes information about exhibits, which will prompt workshop attendees to visit your booth.

You should exhibit if you:

- Offer volunteer international health opportunities
- Work in undeveloped regions and underserved communities abroad
- Collect and donate medical equipment and supplies
- Offer any financial aid (e.g., student loan repayment) for health care professionals who intend to work in underserved communities abroad
- Promote global health through community initiatives and global service learning
- Offer continuing medical education (CME) for local physicians in underserved communities abroad
- Offer cultural and language training for U.S. health care professionals
- Administer international health programs (e.g., rotation, area of concentration, fellowship) via a medical school or family medicine residency program
- Provide staffing services for health care professionals
- Offer international travel, insurance, and medical evacuation services
