

After Residency ...

What?

What kind of practice is right for me?

You probably have a general notion of your ideal practice. If not, use the AAFP's Practice Preference Worksheet to identify priorities such as practice style, community type, and geographic location.

I know what I want. Now what?

AAFP.org's Careers section contains articles and worksheets to help you:

- Polish your CV.
- Learn about negotiating employment contracts.
- Identify prospective employers.
- View current job listings.
- Track your job search progress.

Which practice style is right for me?

Although a small percentage of new family physicians choose to pursue alternative practice styles, most join traditional practices that provide personalized, comprehensive, continuous patient care. The 21st century model of American primary care – the patient-centered medical home (PCMH) – is patient-focused and delivered by teams led by family physicians. Learn more about being part of a PCMH practice.
