Note: Resolutions adopted by the National Congress of Family Medicine Residents are not AAFP policy. Based on recommendations from the AAFP Commission on Education, NCFMR resolutions are referred by the AAFP Board Chair to the appropriate Academy entity. This group then reviews the resolution and determines if further action is appropriate and if policy should be developed relating to the topic of the resolution. *same or similar resolution adopted by the resident congress, National Conference of Constituency Leaders or Congress of Delegates Disclosure questions vary greatly from state to state. There is a great variety of mental health questions. The sheer number of variations of mental health questions preclude the AAFP from effectively communicating with physicians the wording for all locations. The AAFP will not provide legal interpretation and likely steps for a mental health illness/treatment. Generic legal interpretations are not good for the AAFP or the physicians getting them. Each case has too many variables.

Statistics show that medical students enter training with a better mental health status than when they graduate. How much students work is one factor that is critical to wellness. While resident hours are strictly monitored and limited, students have far fewer, if any, protections. The ACGME duty hour requirements for residents have been well-studied, and many schools already follow those standards in their own policies for students. The SRSI felt that it would not be a stretch to request that LCME and COCA require that schools follow the same or similar standards. However, the experiences as students and as faculty obtaining and coordinating family medicine clerkships. They noted the burden of a preceptor shortage, exacerbated by an expansion of health care professions trainees vying for community preceptors. Continuity is a cornerstone of family medicine and primary care, yet continuity of care exposure is not required by medical school accreditors. Although continuity experiences may increase student interest in family medicine, evidence is limited and mixed, and continuity requirements may conversely limit students’ ability to participate in a rural or community clerkships because continuity scheduling often requires students to be near other clerkship sites that they are participating in alongside a continuity experience. SRSI considered asking LCME and COCA to require primary care experiences, rather than stipulate stronger continuity requirements, however, the LCME has historically not been open to promoting any specific specialty or field of medicine. AAFP policies already advocate strongly for longitudinal and early family medicine experiences. These guiding organizational policies, the lack of robust evidence around whether or not continuity experiences drive students to pursues family medicine, and the likely unsuccessful outcome of this appeal to the LCME or COCA led SRSI to its recommendation.

The AAFP’s existing policy statement on Human Trafficking acknowledges that human trafficking is a serious problem affecting vulnerable individuals and Family Physicians support research on the long-term health impacts, including mental health, of decriminalization of the sex trade.

affirms that trained health professionals – including family physicians – are uniquely positioned to identify individuals at risk, and to aid in the identification even prevention of human trafficking. Several resources specific to identification and screening for victims of human trafficking are made available within the existing policy. Members agreed there were several resources available, including an August 2019 AFP editorial on recognizing and assisting victims of human trafficking in family practice. There is work planned internally to update existing AAFP resources to help combat human trafficking, but a timeline has not been determined.
