Supplement Review and Editing

Supplements will be considered for publication when the content is unbiased and of educational value to AAFP members and FPM readers, and when the topic is appropriate to FPM's editorial mission. The executive editor or medical editor will accept or reject a supplement purely on its informational or academic merit.

Supplements that are clearly for promotional purposes will not be considered.

FPM prefers to publish supplements that have been authored and developed under the journal's direct control, utilizing staff writers or staff-selected authors. In the case of manuscript submissions, authors are strongly encouraged to discuss their topic ideas with the executive editor before beginning work on a manuscript. This step allows tailoring of the topic to FPM's audience needs and prevents content overlap with recently published articles or articles in preparation. Authors must be able to demonstrate expertise in the topic area.

Manuscripts will be subjected to the normal peer review processes of the journal. Editors must be alert to manuscripts where the sponsor may have a commercial interest. Authors will be required to complete a conflict of interest disclosure form and relevant financial affiliations will be published with the article as part of the author's biographical information.
